The Age of Jazz

One hundred years ago a group of American musicians docked in London, bringing with them for the very first time one of the twentieth century's most important musical genres: jazz, a fascinating blend of rigorous structure, free-wheeling creativity, close-knit ensemble work and improvisation. Drawing on his practical experience both as musicologist and gigging musician, Sandy's talk touches on the disparate influences behind the emergence of jazz, and his musical illustrations range from the blues, ragtime and the very earliest jazz recordings through to classics by Louis Armstrong's Hot Five and the Duke Ellington Orchestra, and the dawn of the Swing Era. Includes live musical illustrations on the double bass.

A Life in Fashion: the Wardrobe of Cecil Beaton

When Cecil Beaton died in 1980, it was not surprising that one of his tailors was telephoned with the news before Buckingham Palace, despite his close association with the Royal Family. From the moment he arrived at Cambridge University in 1922, to his first meeting with Greta Garbo ten years later to his appearance at Truman Capote's 1970 Black and White Ball, Beaton expressed a flamboyant sartorial nonchalance, his wardrobe expressing at once his confidence and insecurities. This illustrated lecture traces the story of how he used his clothing to curate personal and professional façades as his international career and fame grew.

Repton and the Picturesque

The Picturesque was the final phase of the English Landscape Movement. Capability Brown's serpentine curves, smooth lawns and clumps of trees were now considered insipid and dull by a generation with an enthusiasm for untamed nature and rugged wildness. The aim was always to engender a pleasurable frisson of fear. Repton knew that this was all very well as theory, but his clients actually required practicality and, above all, beauty. Wildness was gradually tamed to become the formal gardens of the nineteenth century.

In the Kingdom of the Sweets

The Nutcracker ballet has delighted audiences at Christmas for many decades yet it was deemed a failure at its initial performances. Based upon the current Royal Ballet production by Sir Peter Wright, this lecture takes a close look at how this well-loved ballet now takes its rightful place on stage and how the music of Tchaikovsky along with story-telling, design, dance and a little bit of stage ingenuity all come together to make the most magical escape for young and old alike. Includes several performance video clips.

The Mystery of Holbein's Ambassadors

Hans Holbein brought with him from mainland Europe to England both sophistication and skill, with far reaching consequences for this island's artistic development. His Ambassadors is one of the National Gallery of London's greatest treasures, dating from a tradition in the arts when no object was without meaning and symbolism, practically all of which has been lost to the modern observer. This lecture considers the tempestuous circumstances of its creation and the hidden messages concealed within it. The painting tells us much about the state of Europe at the time and the hopes and fears of its major players.

The Manufactured Woman: The Story of Pandora and how she has inspired generations of artists to imagine how and why women came into the world

In Greek legend, Pandora was created with the express purpose of causing trouble to men which, by opening her box, she achieved. This lecture looks at the original sources for the story, draws parallels with both Eve in Genesis and Galatea in Ovid before showing how ballets, operas and plays from Coppelia to My Fair Lady and The Winter's Tale to Educating Rita have developed the theme of a creation that runs out of control.

Bloomsbury Group: The Art of Vanessa Bell

Avant-garde painter, designer, decorator, inspired colourist, mother and muse, Vanessa Bell was the warm heart of the Bloomsbury Group, once described by Dorothy Parker as "living in squares and loving in triangles". This has perhaps lessened the fame of her work: this lecture asks the question - was Vanessa Bell the painter as radical as her sister, the writer Virginia Woolf?

Peggy Guggenheim

The 'poor little rich girl' who changed the face of twentieth century art. Not only was Peggy Guggenheim ahead of her time but she was also the woman who helped define it. She discovered and nurtured a new generation of artists producing a new kind of art. Through collecting not only art but also the artists themselves, her life was as radical as her collection.

William Beckford 1760-1844: Genius, Romantic, Notoriety

William Beckford, a man of fabulous wealth, intelligence, and daring taste- a parliamentarian and budding diplomat, was among the most brilliant of his generation. A scandal compelled him to exile abroad where in Portugal he fell in love with Gothic which inspired his own design for his vast Fonthill Abbey in Wiltshire and Lansdown tower in Bath. There he lived his last years. He was a bibliophile, wrote a novel, and had a formidable art collection. This lecture reviews his wide range of talents, his wit, invention, interests and aesthetics.
